RAN away from the subscribers, living in Somerset county, state of Maryland, on the 26th of December last, two Negro Men; George and Randel—George is about six feet high, twenty-two years of age, and of a yellow complexion—had on when he went away a dark cloth coat, kersey breeches and white yarn stockings; he is a pretty good player on the fiddle.—Randel is about five feet two inches high, twenty years of age, and of a yellow complexion, has a loud hoarse voice, and is a good deal bow-legged; he pretends to be something of a cobbler;—had on when he went away, a fustian coat, home-made kersey breeches and white yarn stockings. There is no doubt, but they will change their clothes as well as their names—they having been taken up on the 29th of December last at Duck-creek, in the state of Delaware, and committed by John Cole, Esq. (by the names of Stephen and Charles) to the care of John M'Wherts and Thomas Kerker, from whom they made their escape.——Whoever apprehends the above negroes, and has them secured in jail, so that the subscribers may get them again, shall receive the above reward, or fifty dollars for either.

TAKE NOTICE,
THAT I am to be sold on such terms, that the purchaser need not advance any cash, unless he pleases, till it is earned by my services, provided no accident happens me; or, if you please, I am to be farmed out for two years, and not less. I am a bright bay, full 15½ hands high, of noble descent, my name is TRIMMER—I was got by Hall's imported horse Eclipse, my dam, purchased by Doctor Hall, was got by the imported horse Slim; my grand dam was got by Old Figure; my great grand dam by Taskers Othello out of Selima, &c. &c. as will more fully appear by William Lyle's attested certificate who raised me. My character as a racer is well established; I won the colt's purse at Bladensburg of twenty guineas; I won a fifty guinea purse at Baltimore, a fifty guinea purse at Annapolis and a fifty guinea purse at Hagerstown. I never lost a race but the last I run at Alexandria, which was owning to my being badly shod, as I lost all my plates before I got in. I am in fine plight, sound in every respect; my offspring are in great repute, some of which are now in training for the turf—procure me good stands and entertainment and I am able to earn one thousand dollars per annum.

HAVING invented an effectual check for detecting counterfeit Bank Paper, which has received the sanction of one Bank, and the approbation of the undersigned eminent artists, and having obtained a patent, securing to him, and to his assigns, the exclusive right of the invention, hereby offers to his fellow citizens the privilege of using it upon terms, to be agreed on between him and any person disposed to avail themselves of a guard against counterfeits.

Tyrants party——Meſſrs. Lavancy, Sibbons, L'Eſtrange, Mercer, &c. &c.

An abridged deſcription of the ſubject and ſcenery.

Tell and his hardy followers return from the MOUNTAINS OF SWITZERLAND, with a dead Stag, and other game, the Tyrant with his fawning crew, having been unſucceſsful, claims the produce of their toil—Tell with manly reſolution prevents the execution of the unjuſt demand—an altercation enſues, till the Tyrant being wound up by paſſion bordering on fury, with a deſign to inſult and humble Tell the moſt effectually, places a ſpear in the ground and his cap on the point, orders them to pay obeiſance—being compelled by ſuperior force, they ſmother their reſentment, for the preſent, and obey—during the ceremony, Tell's child ſprings into the arms of his Father, and enquiring the nature of the command, pulls off his cap, brandiſhing it in the air contemptuouſly, throws it at the Tyrants, his hands tear them apart, and Tell is compelled to the dreadful alternative either to be killed on the ſpot or ſhoot an apple from his ſon's head.

At this time Tell's wife enters, and ſeeing her ſon in that perilous ſituation, falls ſenſeleſs on the ground, the ſame moment Tell ſhoots, the apple is cleft in twain, and the arrow remains in the tree—Tell's wife revives and they return thanks to heaven for ſo providential an eſcape—but the Tyrant's perſecution not ended, he makes brutal love to Tell's wife—no longer able to curb his reſentment, Tell and his brave companions maintain an obſtinate battle—the Tyrant being ſeparated from his guards, Tell has wrenched the ſword from his hand, and is about to plunge it in his breaſt, when the ſoldiers having overtaken the child on a hill, threaten him with immediate death, if Tell does not releaſe the Tyrant—the exchange is no ſooner made, than the treacherous Tyrant breaks the truce—Tell is beat off, and his wife runs for ſafety into a
but is purſued by the tyrant—her diſtreſſes, tears and prayers, ſerve rather to encreaſe his brutal paſſion, and ſwears he'll kill her if ſhe will not comply—ſhe prefers death to diſhonor, his arm being lifted for the fatal blow, the child watching from an aperture in the Cave, lets fly an arrow, which pierces the Tyrant's heart, and he falls lifeleſs on the ground—a revolution follows and they celebrate their emancipation in the
TEMPLE OF LIBERTY.

The whole to conclude by half paſt ten.

The ſmall lots front on Vine and Callowhill Streets, near Schuylkill—the large lots front on the ſouth ſide of Francis Street, on the eaſt ſide of Schuylkill river, on the weſt ſide of Schuylkill, ſecond ſtreet, and on intermediate ſtreets—the whole containing about 140 acres, being part of the tract known by the name of Springettſbury.

The ſituation of many of the lots is on high ground, commanding views of the Schuylkill, and ſuppoſed to be ſo much detached from the built parts of the city, as to be out of danger in caſe of an unhappy return of the fever.

Maps ſhewing the diviſion of the ground, may be ſeen at the Coffee-houſe, at Ogden's tavern in Cheſnut ſtreet, at Sybert's tavern in the Nothern Liberties, and at the Middle and Upper Ferries on Schuylkill.

The abundance of ſtone, for building, on part of the ground, will prove very advantageous to purchaſers, as it is propoſed to ſell at the ſame time thoſe large quarries on the eaſt ſide of the Schuylkill, near and above the bridge.

The terms will be caſh for the lots of 49 1-2 and 50 feet front, and for thoſe of a larger ſize one half caſh immediately, and the other half to be paid in ſix months from the day of ſale.

New Philadelphia.

THE proprietors of the high ground in the neighbourhood of this city, known by the name of Springettſbury Manor; (bounded on the weſt by the river Schuylkill, on the eaſt by Fourth ſtreet, from Schuylkill, on the north by Francis's lane, and on the ſouth by Callowhill ſtreet) have agreed to appropriate it for the purpoſe of building a new city as a ſummer retreat.

The plan in two ſections may be ſeen at the Coffee houſe. The main ſtreet, 100 feet wide, runs nearly eaſt and weſt along the top of the ridge, ſtriking Schuylkill a little above the upper ferry, where nature has placed everlaſting abbutments, and ſtone in abundence to form a permanent bridge of one arch, that cannot be approached by ice or floods.

A ſtreet of 66 feet wide, is laid out on each ſide of, and parallel to the Main ſtreet. Theſe are croſſed by five new ſtreets at right angles, and by the continuation of Front, Second, Third and Fourth-ſtreets from Schuylkill.

The ſituation is high, airy and healthy, and commands an extenſive proſpect. The water is good.

The canal runs obliquely through it.

It is juſt a ſufficient diſtance from the Delaware for a pleaſant walk, to give an appetite to dinner after the buſineſs of the day is over.

To accommodate purchaſers, one lot will be put up at a time, and the buyer will have the right to take as many adjoining, as he may think proper, at the ſame rate. The terms are, one third caſh, approved notes at three months for the remainder, when deeds clear of all incumbrances, will be given.

PHILADELPHIA,

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 5.

Extract from 'A Journal of the Occurrences at the Temple during the Confinement of Louis XVI. late King of France, by M. Clery, the King's valet-de-chambre.'

CONTINUED.

THEIR Majeſties, for three months that they had now been ſhut up in the Tower had been accuſtomed to the ſight only Municipal Officers, when on the 1ſt of November, a deputation from the National Convention was announced to them. This deputation conſiſted of Drouet, the Poſt-maſter at Varennes, Chabot, formerly a capuchin, Dubois Crancé, Duprat, and two others, whoſe names I do not recollect. The royal family, and particularly the queen, ſhuddered with horror at the ſight of Drouet, who inſolently ſeated himſelf by her: Chabot following his example, alſo took a chair. They aſked the king how he was treated, and if he was ſupplied with neceſſaries. "I complain of nothing," replied his majeſty, "and only requeſt that the committee will ſupply my valet de chambre with 2000 livres, or leave it with the council, to defray the ſmall current expences, and that we may have ſome linen and other clothes, of which we are in the greateſt need." The deputies promiſed it ſhould be attended to, but nothing was ſent.

Some days after, the king caught a great cold in his head, on which I requeſted that M. Dubois, his majeſty's dentiſt, might be ſent for. It was debated for three days, and at laſt refuſed. A fever coming on, his majeſty was permitted to conſult M. le Monnier, his chief phyſician. It would be difficult to paint the grief of this venerable old man, when he ſaw his maſter.

The Queen and her children never left the King during the day, waited upon him with me, and often aſſiſted me to make his bed. At night, I ſat up alone with His Majeſty. M. le Monnier came twice a day, accompanied by a great number of Municipal Officers: he was ſearched, and not permitted to ſpeak but in a loud voice. Once when the King had taken medicine, M. le Monnier begged to ſtay ſome hours with him: as he continued ſtanding, while the Municipal Officers were ſitting with their hats on, his Majeſty aſked him to take a chair, which he refuſed through reſpect, at which the Commiſſioners loudly murmured. The King continued ill ten days.

Soon after, the young Prince, who ſlept in His Majeſty's chamber, and whom the Officers would not conſent to have removed to the Queen's, caught a cold which was attended with fever. The Queen was the more anxious about it, as ſhe could not obtain permiſſion, although ſhe uſed the moſt fervent entreaties, to be all night with her ſon. During the time ſhe was allowed to be with him ſhe attended him with the moſt affectionate care. The Queen afterwards caught the ſame diſorder, and ſo did Madame Royale and Madame, Elizabeth.—M. le Monnier was ſuffered to continue his viſits.

I fell ill in my turn. My room was damp, and without a fire place, and the little air I breathed in it was confined by the ſlanting ſkreen at the window. I was attacked with a rheumatic fever and great pain in the ſide that forced me to keep my bed. I got up the firſt morning to wait upon the King, but His Majeſty, ſeeing the ſtate I was in, would not ſuffer it, but ordered me to go to bed, and dreſſed the Dauphin himſelf.

During the firſt day the Dauphin ſcarcely ever left me; he brought me all that I drank. At night, the King took an opportunity, when he was leaſt obſerved, to come into my room: he made me a glaſs of cooling liquor, and ſaid to me, with a kindneſs that brought tears into my eyes: "I wiſh "I could attend you myſelf, but you know "how we are watched: keep up your ſpi- "rits; to-morrow you will ſee my Phy- "ſician,' At ſupper time, the Royal Family came into my-room, and Madame Elizabeth, unperceived by the Municipal Officers, gave me a ſmall bottle of linctus.—Though ſhe had a violent cold, ſhe deprived herſelf of the medicine to give it to me: I wiſhed to have declined it, but ſhe inſiſted upon my taking it. After ſupper, the Queen undreſſed the Prince and put him to bed, and Madame Elizabeth rolled the King's hair.

The next morning, M. le Monnier ordered me to be blooded, but the conſent of the Commune was neceſſary for the admiſſion of a Surgeon. They talked of removing me to the Palace in the Temple: but fearing I ſhould never be permitted to return to the Tower, if once I went out of it, I excuſed myſelf from the bleeding, and even pretended to be better. At night we had new municipal officers, and nothing more was ſaid about removing me.

Turgi aſked if he might ſet up with me at night, which he and his two comrades were allowed to do, and they took it in turn. I was ſix days confined to my bed, and the Royal Family come to ſee me every day.—Madame Elizabeth often brought me medecines which ſhe ordered as for herſelf. So many kind attentions greatly recruited my ſtrength; and inſtead of feeling pain I had very ſoon only to feel gratitude and admiration. Who but would have been affected at ſeeing this auguſt Family in a manner, ſuſpending the remembrance of their own protracted miſeries, to attend the ſick bed of one of their ſervants!

Here I muſt not forget to relate an action of the Dauphin's, which proves how great was the goodneſs of his heart, and how he profited by the example of virtue which he had continually before his eyes.

One evening after putting him to bed, I withdrew to give place for the Queen and Princeſſes, who went to kiſs him, and wiſh him good night in his bed. Madame Elizabeth who had been prevented from ſpeaking to me by the watchfulneſs of the Municipal Officers, took that time to put into his hands a little box of ipecacuana lozenges, deſiring him to give it to me when I came back. The Queen and Princeſſes went up their apartments, the King retired to his cloſet, and I took my ſupper. It was eleven o'clock before I went back to the King's chamber to turn down His Majeſty's bed: I was alone, and the Prince called me in a low voice: I was much ſurprized to find him awake, and fearing he was ill, aſked what was the matter. "Nothing," ſaid he, "only my aunt left me a little box for you, and "I would not go to ſleep before I gave it "you; I am glad you are come, for my "eyes have been already ſhut ſeveral times." The tears came into mine, he perceived it, and kiſſed me, and in two minutes was faſt aſleep.

To this ſenſibility the Prince added a great many attractions, and all the amiable qualities of his age. He would often by his arch ſimplicity, the liveneſs of his diſpoſition, and his little frolics, make his Auguſt parents forget their mournful ſituation, yet he felt it himſelf; he knew, young as he was, that he was in a priſon, and that he was watched by enemies. His words and actions had aſſumed that circumſpection which inſtinct prompts perhaps at every age under circumſtances of danger. I never heard him ſpeak either of the Thuilleries, or of Verſailles, or of any object that could recall to the king or queen a painful recollection. If he ſaw a Municipal Officer more civil than his colleagues coming, away he ran to the Queen in haſte to tell her of it, ſaying, with his countenance full of ſatisfaction;—"Mamma, it is Mr. Such-a one to-day."

One day, he kept his eyes fixed upon a Municipal Officer, whom he ſaid he recollected. the man aſked him where he had ſeen him, but the Prince refuſed to anſwer; then leaning over to the Queen, "It was," ſaid he to her in a low voice, "in our jour- "ney to Varennes."

The following anecdote affords another proof of his ſenſibility.—There was a ſtone-cutter employed in making holes at the antichamber door to admit enormous bolts; the Prince, while the man was eating his breakfaſt, played with his tools: the King took the mallet and chiſel out of his ſon's hands, and ſhowed him how to handle them. He uſed them for ſome minutes. The work man, moved at ſeeing the King ſo employed, ſaid to his Majeſty:—"When you go "out of this Tower you will be able to ſay "that you had worked yourſelf at your own "priſon."——Ah!" replied the King, when and how ſhall I go out?"——The Dauphin burſt into tears, and the King, letting fall the mallet and chiſel, returned to his room, where he walked about haſtily and in great agitation.

On the ſecond of December, the Municipality of the 10th of Auguſt was ſuperceded by another, with the title of Proviſionary Municipality. Many of the former Municipal officers were re-elected. I at firſt ſuppoſed that this new body might be of a better compoſition than the former, and I hoped ſome favorable changes in the regulation of the priſon; but I was diſappointed. Several of the new officers gave me reaſon to regret their predeceſſors; they were ſtill coarſer in their manners, but I found it eaſy, from their way of talking, to make myſelf acquainted with whatever they knew. I had to ſtudy the members of this new municipality, in order to judge of their conduct and diſpoſition, the former ones were more inſolent; the malice of the latter was more ſyſtematic and refined.

Till this period, the King had been attended only by one Municipal officer, and the Queen by another. The municipality ordered that there ſhould be two to each, and thence forward, I found it more difficult to ſpeak with the king and the royal family. On the other hand, the council which had hitherto been held in one of the halls in the palace in the temple, was removed to a chamber on the ground floor of the tower. The new municipal officers were deſirous of ſurpaſſing the former in zeal, and this zeal was an emulation of tyranny.

On the 7th of December, an officer at the head of a deputation of the commune came to the king, and read a decree, ordering that the perſons in confinement ſhould be deprived of "knives, razors, ſciſſors, and all other ſharp inſtruments, which are uſually taken from criminals, and that the ſtricteſt ſearch ſhould be made for the ſame, as well on their perſons as in their apartments." In reading this his voice faultered: it was eaſy to perceive the violence he did to his feelings, and he has ſince ſhewn by his conduct, that he had conſented to come to the temple, only in the hope of being uſeful to the royal family.

The King took out of his pockets a knife and a ſmall morocco pocket book, from which he gave the penkife and ſciſſors. The officers ſearched every corner of the apartment, and carried off the razors, the curling irons, the powder ſcraper, inſtruments for the teeth, and other articles of gold and ſilver. The ſame ſearch was made in my room, and I was ordered to empty my pockets.

They then went up to the queen, read the decree over again to her and the princeſſes, and deprived them even of the little articles they uſed in working.

In an hour afterwards, I was ſummoned to the council chamber, where I was aſked if I did not know what were the articles that remained in the pocket-book, which the King had returned into his pocket.—"I order you," ſaid a municipal officer named Sermaize, "to take the pocket-book away this night." I replied, that it was not my buſineſs to put the decrees of the commune into execution, nor to ſearch the king's pockets. "Clery is in the right," ſaid another municipal officer, addreſſing himſelf to Sermaize, "it was your buſineſs to have made the ſearch."

A minute was made of all the articles taken from the royal family; which were put up in ſeparate packets and ſealed. I was then commanded to ſign my name to an order, by which I was enjoined to give notice to the council if I found any ſharp inſtruments in poſſeſſion of the king or royal family, or in any of their apartments.—Theſe different articles were all ſent to the commune.

By examining the regiſters of the council of the temple, it may be ſeen that I had often been compelled to ſign decrees and demands of which I was very far from approving either the form or ſubſtance. I never did ſign any thing, ſay any thing, or do any thing but as ſpecially directed by the king or queen. A refuſal on my part might have ſeparated me from their majeſties, to whom I had devoted my exiſtence; and my ſignature at the bottom of certain decrees only went to ſhow that they had been read to me.

Sermaize, the perſon of whom I have been ſpeaking, went with me to his majeſty's apartment. The king was ſitting at the fire, with the tongs in his hand. Sermaize deſired by authority of the council to ſee what was left in his pocket-book: the king took it out of his pocket and opened it. It contained a turn ſcrew, a gun worm and a little gun ſteel. Sermaize made him give them up. The king, turning on his heel, aſked if the tongs he held in his hand were not alſo a ſharp inſtrument? When the municipal officer was gone down, I had an opportunity of informing his majeſty of all that had paſſed at the council relative to this ſecond ſearch.

A QUESTION,
For Natural Philoſophers to ſolve.

From what cauſe is it, that a key ſuſpended in a tumbler or wine glaſs, by a thread twiſted at one end round the finger, ſhall vibrate until it ſtrikes on the ſide of the glaſs the hour of the day or night, and then ceaſes to vibrate? I have ſeen the experiment made ſundry times, both in the night and day, and it never failed telling the neareſt hour. And why is it, that the ſame key tied to a ſtick, and ſuſpended in the ſame manner, ſhall not vibrate at all? It will appeare more extraordinory, when it is conſidered, that the diviſion of time into twice twelve hours, is an arbitrary diviſion.

TRIESTE, December 20.

Freſh accounts have been received of the expedition accompliſhed by the Baſhaw of Janina againſt the French garriſons of Prevona, Voinizzo, Pargo and other poſts, ſituated in Albania, belonging to the late republic of Venice. The Turkiſh troops employed in this expedition conſiſted of thirty-thouſand men. They gave no quarters to the French, who loſt gen. Hotte and the general of brigade Salcette. After the Baſhaw had driven the French totally out of this country, he embarked part of his troops on board the combined Ruſſian and Turkiſh ſquadrons, which have been beſieging the French garriſons at Caſtello Novo, in Corfu, ever ſince the 4th November. The garriſon, conſiſting of twelve hundred men, is commanded by gen. Chabot. Upon the Ruſſians and Turks landing at Corfu, they were joined by the inhabitants againſt the French. So that ſhould Caſtello Novo not have capitulated ere this, the event cannot fail of taking place ere long, it being very difficult for them to receive the proviſions expected from Ancona, and which are ſaid to have left that place about the latter end of laſt month, on board two Ex-Venetian ſhips and one frigate.

AFFAIRS OF IRELAND.

On Sunday morning about 9 o'clock, a king's meſſenger arrived at Burlington-Houſe Piccadilly, with diſpatches from the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, containing the heads of the debate, and the diviſions in the two houſes of Parliament, on addreſſing his excellency, thanking him for this ſpeech from the throne, and promiſing to take it into the earlieſt conſideration. As theſe addreſſes implied a kind of promiſe to ſupport the union, the parties in each houſe tried their ſtrength in this early ſtage of the buſineſs, though certainly it would have been more becoming to have firſt heard the plan developed before any deciſion was adopted on the propriety of it.

The houſe of lords adjourned at 12 o'clock on Tueſday night; the diviſion being for the addreſs 46, againſt it 19. The debate in the commons was as memorable for its duration as for its importance, the houſe having ſat 22 hours. Never was a debate conducted with more animoſity and violence, nor an inſtance where the parties ran ſo even; as, on the diviſion, the majority was only two for the addreſs. The following are the letters of our correſpondents, giving a general outline of the proceedings.

Extract of a private letter from Dublin, dated January 13, 10 P. M.

"Our houſe of commons did not break up till near two this day, after ſitting from four yeſterday. The addreſs from the throne was oppoſed in that part of it which related to the union, and an amendment was propoſed by Mr. G. Ponſonby, a returned recorder.

"At 12 o'clock this day they divided—for the amendment 105—againſt it 106—majority one.—A ſecond diviſion took place—for the main queſtion 107—againſt it 105—majority two.

"The majority conſiſted of ſeceders, diſcontented loyaliſts, affronted placemen, and men turned out of office, who oppoſed the union, becauſe the ſpeaker was hoſtile. You ſee how near it came to his caſting vote.

"It is reported that Lord Caſtlereagh has pledged his word to withdraw the meaſure until the people ſhall demand it.

"The kings and Coles, (lords Kingſborough and Enniſkellen) who have had a perſonal diſagreement with lord Cornwallis, made though ſuppoſed friends to the meaſure, a difference of 22 in the diviſion againſt government.

"We have illuminations and bells ringing but no miſchief. The chancellor is protected by a guard, for a mob came and threatened to be riotous.

"The oppoſition in the commons are quite proud of their ſtrength; but they would ſoon fall, if proper meaſures were taken.

"The addreſs in the houſe of lords was moved by the Earl of Ormond, and ſeconded by Lord Glendore. Lord Powerſcourt propoſed an amendment, the ſubſtance of which was, that the Parliament of Ireland, was not competent to alienate the Independence of Ireland, and that an union would injure the proſperity of the country. Some of the members who oppoſed the union would not admit the principle of the incompetence of Parliament to come into diſcuſſion, on which lord Powerſcourt aſked for leave to withdraw his amendment, which was refuſed by the miniſterial ſide. The principle of the amendment was then debated; and the addreſs at length carried by a large majority."

January 29.

The mail which arrived yeſterday from Ireland brought a very intereſting report of the leading points urged in the debate, in the two houſes of parliament on the opening of the ſeſſions, which we have given at ſome length. From the concluding part of it, it appears that lord Caſtlereagh, on being preſſed by Mr. Ponſonby, to know whether he intended ſtill to adhere to the queſtion of the union, replied, "That with reſpect to the time at which he ſhould bring it again before the houſe, he would not at preſent ſay any thing—he muſt in that be guided by his own diſcretion—but that ſeeing the diſlike which the houſe ſeemed to entertain of the meaſure, he would not preſs it ſpeedily."

Be this as it may, we have grounds to hope that though the conſideration of the meaſure may be poſtponed in Ireland, it will not be abandoned. Mr. Pitt will, as we ſtated yeſterday, bring forward his reſolutions on Thurſday in parliament, containing the general outline of the plan of union, which will probably meet the concurrence of the legiſlature of this kingdom, more particularly when the report of the ſecret committee, now ſitting, is publiſhed. The opinion of the Britiſh parliament being once ſolemnly pronounced, cannot fail to have material influence in Ireland, where we believe the meaſure is more ſtrongly oppoſed, becauſe it is not properly underſtood. Had more time been allowed to enter into mutual explanations we think there would have been leſs oppoſition It is probable that the ſubject will be left for the re-conſideration of a future ſeſſion of parliament.

AFFAIRS OF ITALY.

[From the Redacteur.]

PARIS, January.

A letter from Rome, dated Dec. 16, ſays "The French army, after having had ſeveral partial actions with the Neapolitan army, conſiſting of 80,000 men has driven them entirely out of the territory of the Roman republic. The Neapolitan troops were beaten at Ponto-Fermo, Terni, Civiti, Caſtellana, Monter-Offi, Otticolli, Culvi, Rietti, Civitadel, Irono, Conta-Lupo, and Storta, and had retreated in diſorder to the kingdom of Naples. Gen. Championet advanced on the 22d Frimaire (Dec. 12) to give battle to the Neapolitans, but the king, and captain gen. Mack, preferred abandoning their army, and flying with precipitation to Naples, where the agitation of the public mind is ſo great that a general inſurrection is dreaded. This gen. Mack is, however, called a great man. In the preſent inſtance he has proved that his inſolence is only equalled by his cowardice. (Here the letter ſtates the number of priſoners, &c. taken, as in the meſſage of the directory.) The retreat, or rather the flight of the captain Mack, was ſo precipitate, that he forgot to give orders to a corps of 4000 men, poſted in the environs of Civita-Caſtellana, to retire. The corps, in attempting to paſs the Tiber, at Rome, was attacked by the French troops, who took all the cannon, and 1800 priſoners, and killed and diſperſed the remainder."

Council of Five Hundred, Jan. 1.

The Preſident announced, that he had received a meſſage from the executive directory, containing the happy news of a victory gained by the French army in Italy. At theſe words the hall reſounded with cries of "Vive la Republic."

The ſecretary read the meſſage.

"Eighty thouſand Neapolitans had inundated the Roman territory. The French army having been attacked without any declaration of war, and unable to retain any other poſſeſſion than that of St. Angelo, ſaid to the Romans, "in twenty days we will again be within your wall;" ſeventeen days did not elapſe before this promiſe was performed. Rome is again become free. Porto Ferro, Civita Deltrone, Livita Caſtellana, Rietti, Storta, Terni and ſeveral other cities, have in their turns ſeen our warriors fight and conquer. Twelve thouſand priſoners, ninety-nine pieces of cannon, twenty-one ſtandards, and flags, three thouſand horſes and mules, and the baggage and the cheſts of the flying enemy taken, are the fruit of twenty days campaign. The Neapolitan army is completely routed. Mack and the king were the firſt to fly. The French army are on their march againſt Naples."

New teſtimonies of joy manifeſted themſelves on the reading of this meſſage, which was ordered to be publiſhed.

Eſchaſſereaux, the elder, and Porte, in ſucceſſion, paid the tribute of gratitude to the republicans who had diſtinguiſhed themſelves by new triumphs. The council ordered their ſpeeches to be printed, and declared, that the French army which had conquered the Neapolitans in the Roman republic had deſerved well of their country.

January 14.

Gen. Champoinet has addreſſed the following letter to the Roman conſuls:

Monte Rotondo, 24th Frimaire, Dec. 14.

"Rome is free, but it is not yet worthy to receive the French within its walls. I have demanded that the guilty ſhould be given up to me. Rome, diſtracted by the ſpirit of fury and of revenge, ought not to preſent a ſpectacle of ſorrow to its lawful repreſentatives. I order you therefore citizens conſuls, not to return to that capital, till tranquility ſhall be re-eſtabliſhed, and Rome ſhall be worthy to receive you.

CHAMPOINET."

Head-Quarters, Rome, Dec. 16.

"Championet, general in chief, to the army.

"Comrades,

"Whilſt you were beating the Neapolitans, the army of Italy dethroned the king of Sardinia. The king of Naples alſo muſt fall from his throne. To-morrow we ſhall again advance.

"In every engagement with the enemy, you have conſtantly beaten him. Another march of ſix days, and Naples will be conquered, &c. &c.

"The general in chief orders, that every individual employed in the army, ſubject to the requiſition, or the conſcription, ſhall immediately reſign his office, and be incorporated in a demi-brigade or in a regiment of cavalry. The Generals, the Ordonnateur en Chef, and the commanders of corps, are charged with the execution of this order."

Extract of a letter from citizen Hillarion Point, General of Brigade.

Aquilla, 28th Frimaire, Dec. 18.

"The provinces of Abruzzo are in our poſſeſſion; and yeſterday, at 9 o'clock at night, we entered Aquila, the capital of this province, driving before us the Neapolitan levy, en maſſe, that is to ſay, the ſelf named volunteers put in requiſition in theſe provinces. Lemoine general of diviſion, ſent a flag of truce to the commander of the Neapolitan troops, with a declaration, that he ſhould conſider him reſponſible for all the evils that ſhould befall this city. But his anſwer not not being received at the appointed hour, the troops advanced, forced open the gates, and we entered the city. All the poſts were taken poſſeſſion of, the inhabitants were forbidden to appear at the windows, and the majority of them were ſurprized, on the next morning, to find that we were maſters of the place. The fort ſurrendered this morning at diſcretion: we have found a great quantity of ammunition there, and have placed a ſtrong garriſon in it.

"The king of Naples did not expect this viſit ſo ſoon; the high and rugged mountains which encircle Abruzzo, ſerve as a natural barrier to the country. To reach Aquila, we marched thirty ſix miles through very difficult paſſes and defiles, and croſſed the higheſt of the Appenine mountains. The volunteers of theſe provinces, however, occupied the heights, and harraſſed us on our march. We detached in purſuit of them, ſome companies of ſharp ſhooters, who climbed the heights, and diſlodged them, and thus we arrived at Aquila. We are now on the great road to Naples, where we ſhall doubtleſs very ſoon arrive.

"We found poſted up in the city of Aquila a proclamation of the king of Naples, particularly addreſſed to the inhabitants of the provinces of Abruzzo, and dated about five or ſix days before from the head quarters at Rome. It commands them in the name of their king, their holy religion, and the honour of their wives and daughters, to take up arms, and to ruſh upon the French, who, it ſays, in twice twenty four hours, will no longer exiſt. Among other flattering exhortations, "brave Samnite's warlike race of heroes, imitate your anceſtors; you amount to ſeven hundred thouſand inhabitants—march, and the buſineſs is finiſhed. I am maſter of Rome, from whence I have driven thoſe miſerable Frenchmen who dared not to make any reſiſtance, being convinced that they had to do with a numerous and brave army; that cowards only would ſuffer themſelves to be beaten, and that we had only to march againſt them."

"Had they been as courageous as they were numerous, they might have given us a good deal of trouble; but this en maſſe did not long continue to reſiſt us.

"We have enlarged ſeveral patriots who were confined in the citadel of this place on account of their democratic opinions, among whom was one Jourdan who has been four years in priſon, on an accuſation of having preſided in a certain club in Naples. He is a young man of talents, and a great mathematician."

Extract of a letter from an officer of the army of Rome, addreſſed, 3d Nivoſe, (Dec. 23) to one of his friends at Paris.

"General Kellerman being ſent by the general in chief of the Army of Rome againſt Veterbo, to puniſh the vile inhabitants for the cruelties exerciſed by them on our ſick, found his march ſtopped by the Neapolitan general Dawas, who with a great body of troops compoſed of runaways, fortuitouſly rallied, was making his retreat ſlowly, and in good order—Kellerman, overtook him at Mount-Alto, and attacked him. Dawas, formerly a colonel in the French ſervice, is the braveſt officer in the Neapolitan army; he has diſplayed, amongſt the enemies of his country to whom he has ſold himſelf, the French courage. His defence was a fine one, and covered with glory; his conqueror Kellerman, who tired of the extraordinary reſiſtance, threw himſelf, at the head of his ſoldiers, into the ranks of the enemy, where he ſpread death and terror, made a whole battalion priſoners, took all the artillery which remained in the hands of the fugitives, and drove them in diſorder to Orbitello, from whence Dawas fled, leaving part of his jaws behind him, which had been carried away by a ſhot.

"Kellerman, triumphant, then returned to Viterbo; he found the walls covered with the rebels in arms, and "briſtling" with cannon. They refuſed to ſurrender at the firſt ſummons: the following was addreſſed to them by the general in chief, Championet: "Viterbo will open its gates, or Viterbo will be only a heap of aſhes." It is thought that this vile rebel, too criminal to hope for pardon, has liſtened to no other counſel than his deſpair, and has braved the terrible menace which has been put in execution. I ſhall have certain intelligence to-morrow, which I will ſend you.

"Championet, notwithſtanding the force remaining before Viterbo, has continued the rapid courſe of his ſucceſs, and his arms contradict the ſtupid falſehoods with which the ſoporific pen of the Frankfort Journaliſt daily fills his paper, amuſing the republicans, and exciting the contempt of thoſe of his readers whoſe reaſon has not been deſtroyed by a fooliſh ariſtocracy.

"Championet advances and puts to flight the Neapolitans from all the poſts in which they were intrenched in order to take breath. Terracino, reduced, recognizes the laws of the great nation, and the republican flags, flying on the borders of the Stangliano, carry terror even to Naples, from whence their colours may be perceived."

PARMA, December 19.

The king of Sardinia arrived at Paclenza at three in the morning of the 17th, with a train of twenty carriages and three chariots, eſcorted by 120 French huſſars and 80 Piedmonteſe dragoons, who wore the French cockade. He ſet forwards yeſterday for Borgo San Domino, and he paſſed through this city about two this afternoon. Our Duke has paid him the higheſt honors.

The firſt column of the Ruſſian troops has already arrived at Brune.

LEGHORN, January 4.

On the 2d we learnt, that the French had relaxed the expedition of their march; that in the evening they had agreed to evacuate Tuſcany whenever the Neapolitans evacuated Leghorn, and the blockade of the port ſhould ceaſe. Yeſterday there was circulated a copy of the miniſterial note communicated to all the diplomatic agents, couched nearly in the following remarkable words: "Peace between the Emperor, the Empire, and the French republic, being concluded, the neutrality of Tuſcany is guaranteed by the contracting parties!" You may judge of the ſenſation produced by this intelligence, in a country which, from the brink of the precipice on which it ſtood, feels itſelf reſtored to a ſtate of ſafety and proſperity.

January 11.

Advices received here from Palermo, in four days, ſtate, that the king and queen of Naples, and all their ſuite, had reached there on the 25th December, after a very dreadful ſtorm. The Vanguard had only her lower maſts ſtanding upon reaching the harbour. One of the king's children of ſix or ſeven years of age, is ſaid to have died on the paſſage. Prince Pignatelli remained at Naples to hold the reins abandoned by government.

VIENNA, January 9.

The archduke Joſeph has repaired to Peterſburgh. It is ſaid that he is to eſpouſe the eldeſt daughter of the emperor of Ruſſia. He is in conſequence to be made either duke of Courtland or king of Poland. The archduke Charles, it is ſaid at the ſame time, is to be married to one of the princeſſes of England.

PARIS, January 6.

The French emigrants, at the requeſt of the republican miniſters, have received orders to quit Raſtadt.

It is ſtated in many of of the papers, that the people of the iſland of Sardinia have refuſed to receive their unfortunate ſovereign.

January 8.

The king of Sardinia paſſed by Parma. He was obliged to remain there ſome days, becauſe his wife was taken ill. He thence purſued his route towards Leghorn, where he is to embark for Sardinia.

Admiral Nelſon, on leaving Leghorn, divided his fleet into two ſquadrons; one of theſe ſailed for the coaſt of Genoa, the other for Sicily.

BOSTON, March 29.

INTERCEPTED DISPATCHES.

On Wedneſday arrived from Alicant, via Gibralter, the faſt-ſailing armed brig Alert, capt. Rich, only 29 days from the latter port, where he remained but 8 hours. The American Conſul confided to his care a package of Diſpatches, written in cyphers, addreſſed to Citoyen Talleyrand, and found on board of the ſhip Aſtrea, capt. Pearce, from New-York, and profeſſedly bound to Corunna, in Spain. The ſhip was met with at ſea by a Britiſh frigate—and capt. Pearce, was deſired to receive on board a few Spaniſh priſoners, which he refuſing, with ſingular vehemence, ſuſpicions were excited reſpecting her true deſtination, and the neutrality of her cargo. In conſequence of which ſhe was taken poſſeſſion of. A few days afterwards, the Cabin boy, in taking a bottle of porter from ſome ſtraw in the ſtern locker, drew forth a letter, which the Captain, who was ſtanding by, with confuſion, inſtantly ſeized and pocketed. This being communicated to the Prize Maſter, induced him to ſearch for other papers; and between the ſealing and the quarter deck over the cabin was found the Diſpatches in Cyphers. The nature of the letter from the locker, we have not heard. When the Prize arrived at Gibralter the Captain and a Paſſenger were put into confinement. —Soon after capt. Rich arrived on Wedneſday, theſe papers were carried to the Preſident at Quincy. Nothing has yet tranſpired of their contents.

Capt. Rich mentions that reports had prevailed of the aſſaſſination of Buonaparte; but the lateſt were, that he was living and at Grand Cairo. Strong weſterly winds, which had blown for 30 days, and prevented any late news from coming by water down the Streights. It was ſaid that the King of Naples from prudential motives, had quitted Terra Firma, and croſſed over to Scicily; but that the French had not, at that time, ſubdued his Kingdom.

A letter from an officer on board the frigate United States, dated Prince Rxport's Bay, Feb. 17 mentions, that the French privateer which they ſunk was commanded by one Peter Solemnic, and had been four years in ſervice as a pirate on the American commerce; ſhe had been all the time before this cruize commanded by one Williams, an American.

The ſame letter adds, that the United States national ſhips on that ſtation had convoyed 84 ſail of American merchantmen from the clutches of Frenchmen; and remarks, that theſe defenſive meaſures, ought to ſtop the clamour of Jacobiniſm, which has ſo long raved againſt the expence of a naval armament.

In another letter of the ſame date it is ſtated, that a report is in circulation that Capt. Nicholſon has captured a French frigate after an obſtinate engagement of three hours and an half.

The diſaſters of Naples and Sardinia are awful monitors to thoſe nations who are ſtill ſo infatuated as to behold with unconcern, or ſo depraved as to view with complacency, the conduct of a power which ſeeks its eſtabliſhment and can only find it in the bouleverſement of every exiſting order of things.

Far, however, from advancing this eſtabliſhment, the events alluded to can tend only to prolong that ſtate of things, which is, in itſelf, a far better chaſtiſement for the crimes of Revolutioniſts, than human ingenuity could deviſe. This ſtate of puniſhment will be prolonged until the crimes of the Revolution have been more abundantly expiated; and if the prolongation be ſometimes promoted by ſo unpleaſant an event as the downfal of a King who manfully riſked his laſt ſtake againſt an helliſh bondage,—it is not for us to complain. It is our part to ſee, in the inſtance before us, that the King was wiſe too late, and to apply the leſſon ſeriouſly and ſoberly as it ought to be applied.

The myrmidons of the Pentarchy having, like a horde of half-ſtarv'd Jackals, devoured the heart's blood of Naples and Sardinia, and left the body an uſeleſs and corrupting maſs, appear to be now ſwarming towards the domains of the Medici. As a tainted atmoſphere gathers the ill-omened birds of prey, or the ſcent of blood the ravening beaſts of the wilderneſs,—ſo the monuments of genius and learning, the fanes of religion, order and tranquility, ſerve as ſigns to direct the courſe of this brutalizing banditti.
